our capabilities

history

Ainley Projects was launched in 2006 with the father and daughter combination of Graeme and Belinda Ainley. With their diverse knowledge and experience, they saw an opportunity to combine their shared passion for coastal and natural environmental projects. Their unique skills, knowledge and experience were keenly sought and the company grew.

Ainley Projects completed many coastal, community and environmental projects around Victoria and Australia. As the team and workload grew, Mark Ainley, joined the company in 2010 to manage the business.

We are proud to have maintained our strong client relationships and to have worked on some outstanding projects. We care about our projects and enjoy seeing them through to completion.

We believe that we can offer our clients service which they may not always get with larger companies. Our family brand is important to us. We are a professional, personable and reliable company - we always act with integrity to deliver quality service to our clients.

we pride ourselves on quality assurance

Our personal approach means that senior staff are always available to answer questions or offer advice throughout the duration of projects, and beyond.

can do attitude

Our team is committed to getting the job done and resolving issues that arise.

flexibility

We understand that project timelines and tasks may change, and being flexible enables the team to easily adapt to ensure each project runs smoothly.

experienced staff

Ainley Projects' staff have a diverse range of backgrounds, bringing a broad mix of skills, experience and qualifications to every job.

high values

The team at Ainley Projects has a strong work ethos, and upholds strong family, business and ethical values.

key personnel

Graeme Ainley senior engineer

Graeme is a Civil and Structural engineer with over 40 years' experience working on construction and engineering projects of all sizes. With his expertise in engineering and construction merged with his boating passion and knowledge (25 years competing in the Sydney to Hobart Ocean Yacht Race and previously head of Yachting Australia) there is no one else better placed to handle your boating or coastal related project. Graeme's innovative approach and commitment to see projects through means he is sought after world-wide for advice on boating facility projects. He is a world leader in drystack boat storage design, frequently providing his expert advice.

Belinda Ainley project manager, coastal & environmental planner

Belinda has over 15 years' experience. In her diverse career she has worked all over Australia, from remote National Parks to inner city Councils. She has served on numerous regional project advisory groups and associations, presented several conference papers and also sits on a number of Federal and State Government environmental and community grant assessment committees.

Belinda prides herself on her strong communication skills and is passionate about working and consulting with all stakeholders, be it local communities through to governments on projects she undertakes.

A Young Australian of the Year Award in 2001 recognised her commitment to the environment. Her main areas of interest and expertise are in coastal, bushfire and cultural heritage issues.

Mark Ainley business manager

Mark brings a background in marketing and business development to Ainley Projects. His experience working in property development based organisations gives him a good understanding of client expectations, work flow and best practice systems.

Mark's approach to business is much like his approach to football – commitment, passion and team work. He cares about continuing the family business' success into the future, and managing a team committed to hard work and quality service.

our capabilities

coastal projects

We understand that coastal projects require careful planning and a unique skill set in order to resolve the often complex issues - especially when undertaking projects in harsh, yet extremely sensitive coastal environments. We always seek to balance the competing interests between different coastal users, through a strong commitment to stakeholder and community consultation.

Ainley Projects team of experts come from a diverse background, offering a unique mix of skills, qualifications and experience to resolve complex issues. We understand the complexities of coastal planning and management and the challenges faced by land and facility managers.

community projects

Liaising with government departments, community groups, management boards and local charities, we manage projects from inception through to completion, ensuring the successful outcome of every community project undertaken.

Community projects often require prompt reporting and feedback, frequent updates and supporting documentation, which is not always readily available when dealing with larger corporate organisations. Ainley Projects also assists groups seeking funding for eligible projects.

Strict adherence to deadlines and budgets underpins our commitment to each client's specific needs. Ainley Projects' strong community focus ensures that projects undertaken enhance local communities and are economically viable.

environmental projects

All of our staff take environmental issues seriously and strive to find solutions to protect the natural environment and sensitive environmental areas, while overseeing and managing its clients' projects.

Ainley Projects provides personal service and professional advice, working closely with clients at all times to ensure projects run smoothly and comply with relevant environmental legislation to avoid running into unnecessary and unforeseen challenges.

Ainley Projects has an award-winning environmental consultant in-house who offers a wealth of experience in environmental management. We can assist you with project environmental compliance, environmental management plans, bushfire and environmental assessments for planning approvals.
